Fetal Cardiac Evaluation

A fetal heart evaluation will be performed by fetal echocardiography.

About Fetal Echocardiograms:

- Fetal echocardiography is a test similar to an ultrasound that looks at the structure and function of an unborn child's heart.
- The images are interpreted by a pediatric cardiologist who specializes in fetal heart disease.
- When the fetal echocardiogram is completed, a pediatric cardiologist will meet with you to discuss the results in detail.
- This fetal heart evaluation will monitor the fetal wellbeing and assist in being prepared at the time of delivery for any special interventions that may be needed.
- The dedicated team of cardiac clinicians is prepared to provide comprehensive care to the infant and family. This care begins at the time of a fetal diagnosis and continues through the rest of gestation, at birth and postnatally by the cardiology, cardiovascular, newborn and intensive care teams.
- A nurse navigator will help coordinate the care the baby may need and provide support to the family.
- You will have access to the care team who will update you with the progress the baby is making.
